Cleveland, Ohio (July 26, 2010) – Art in the Village returns to Cleveland for Part II of its signature summer show that festival goers have come to anticipate for the diverse display of quality art created by the nation's leading artists. The artistic media represented at this new show will also include paintings, life size sculptures, photography, glass, wood, jewelry, collage and ceramics with prices ranging from $25 hand-designed earrings to $20,000 metal sculptures. Admission is free and open to the public.

"We kicked off the season with our June show and now we're back by popular demand with Part II," says festival promoter Howard Alan. "Many artists that exhibited in the first show will be returning but new artists will also be featured at the debut of this festival. Our shows offer the public a fun and family friendly weekend activity with a fabulous opportunity to explore the work of local and national artists in one setting."

"The addition of our second seasonal show, Art in the Village Part II, is a reflection of the incredible popularity of the show over the years," said Legacy Village General Manager Marcie Gilmore. "Immersed in a community of art lovers, we expect the fall show will be a popular addition to Legacy Village's September event line-up."

Additional Information:

The artists, juried by an independent panel of expert judges, are hand-selected from hundreds of applicants based on quality and diversity. All of their artwork is original and handmade in America. Howard Alan Events stipulates that all artists are required to be on-site for the entire duration of the show. The artists will line Legacy Village with their gallery style display booths, transforming this popular shopping and dining destination into a first-class outdoor art gallery. The public can meet and talk with the artists personally, asking questions about their art and inspiration. Art in the Village makes the arts accessible to a broad audience. The event appeals to people of all ages as a free and fun weekend activity, as well as serious art buyers looking to add to their collections.
